The camshaft is a component in a piston engine. Its function is to control the opening and closing action of the valve. Although the speed of the camshaft in a four-stroke engine is half that of the crankshaft (the speed of the camshaft is the same as the crankshaft in a two-stroke engine), its speed is still very high and it needs to withstand a lot of torque, so the design The camshaft has high requirements in terms of strength and support, and its material is generally high-quality alloy steel or alloy steel. Since the law of valve movement is related to the power and operating characteristics of an engine, camshaft design occupies a very important position in the engine design process.
