The cylinder sleeve of a motorcycle refers to the complete set of three components: cylinder block, piston, and piston ring. Some also come with a piston pin. The cylinder sleeve refers to a set. Generally, when a motorcycle burns engine oil, it is best to replace the cylinder block, piston, and piston rings as a whole set. Replacing just one piece individually is not effective and may cause the engine to burn oil again soon. Moreover, replacing the entire set of parts will interfere with each other. The matching between them is better and errors are less likely to occur. When repairing or selling parts, a set of cylinder block, piston and piston ring is called "cylinder set".

Motorcycle cylinder lining refers to the process of replacing the motorcycle engine block. When a motorcycle's engine block shows severe wear, cracks, or other damage, a cylinder lining operation may be required to repair or replace the block.
