WAY-C

TVS HLX is a motorcycle model, and the shock absorber (Shock Absorber) is part of the rear suspension system of the motorcycle, used to reduce road vibrations and provide a smoother driving experience.

The rear shock absorber of a motorcycle is an important part of the rear suspension system. It is used to absorb and reduce the impact and vibration from the road surface, providing a smoother riding experience and better suspension adjustment. Rear shock absorbers usually consist of springs and dampers.

The spring is responsible for supporting the weight of the vehicle body and providing rebound force, while the damper controls the shock absorption effect by controlling the compression and rebound speed of the spring. They work together to allow the motorcycle to better adapt to uneven road surfaces and provide stable suspension adjustment while driving.
