A motorcycle handle is a component installed on the handle of a motorcycle. The rider controls the steering, acceleration, braking and other operations of the motorcycle through the handle.

Brake Lever: The brake lever is usually located on the right handlebar and is used to control the front braking system (front brake). When the rider pulls the brake handle, the braking system applies pressure to slow or stop the front wheel.

Clutch Lever: The clutch lever is usually located on the left handle and is used to control the clutch operation between the engine and the transmission system. When the rider pulls the clutch handle, the clutch disengages so that the engine's power is not transmitted to the transmission system and the rider can shift gears or stop.
