Motorcycle speedometer is an instrument that measures and displays the speed at which a motorcycle is traveling. It provides the rider with real-time information about their current speed. The speedometer is typically located on the motorcycle's instrument cluster, which is positioned within the rider's field of view.

Modern motorcycle speedometers are usually electronic and utilize sensors to measure the rotation speed of the motorcycle's wheels or the output from the transmission. The sensor relays this information to the speedometer, which then converts it into a speed reading displayed on the gauge.
