The motorcycle gear lever, also known as the gear shift lever or gear selector, is a component located near the left footrest on a motorcycle. Its primary function is to allow the rider to shift gears by engaging different gear ratios in the motorcycle's transmission system.

The gear lever is typically connected to the motorcycle's transmission via a linkage or shift mechanism. When the rider presses down or lifts up on the gear lever with their left foot, it actuates the shift mechanism, causing the transmission to change to a different gear.
