The rear brake lever on a motorcycle is a component that allows the rider to activate the rear brake system. It is typically located on the right side of the motorcycle's handlebars and is operated by the rider's right foot.

When the rider presses down on the rear brake lever, it activates the rear brake system, which typically consists of a hydraulic caliper and brake pads. The brake pads are pressed against the brake disc or drum, creating friction and slowing down the rotation of the rear wheel. This helps in controlling the speed of the motorcycle, especially during deceleration or when coming to a stop.
