Motorcycle Half Bendix is a specific type of clutch mechanism in motorcycles. Bendix is a clutch device commonly used in motorcycle starter systems. It allows the transfer of energy in one direction and blocks it in the other direction. The bendix device of a motorcycle starter is usually located on the output shaft of the starter and is connected to the crankshaft or flywheel of the engine. During the starting process, the rotational force of the starter is transmitted to the bendix device, unlocking it and allowing the power of the starter to be transmitted to the engine, thereby starting the engine. Once the engine is started and running on its own, the one-way device locks, preventing the engine's motion from being transmitted reversely to the starter.
