A motorcycle engine guard set, also known as crash bars or engine crash protectors, is a protective accessory designed to safeguard the motorcycle's engine and other critical components in the event of a fall or accident. These guards are typically made of sturdy materials such as steel or aluminum and are installed on the frame of the motorcycle.

The primary purpose of an engine guard set is to provide a buffer zone between the motorcycle's engine and the ground or other objects during a crash. They are designed to absorb and distribute impact forces, helping to minimize damage to the engine, frame, and other vulnerable parts. Engine guards can also help prevent or reduce injuries to the rider by preventing direct contact with the motorcycle in case of a slide or fall.

In addition to crash protection, engine guard sets can offer other advantages. They often provide additional mounting points for accessories such as highway pegs, auxiliary lights, or skid plates. Some engine guard sets may also feature integrated or optional auxiliary storage compartments.
