WAY-C®

The front fender of a motorcycle is a component located at the front of the bike, above the front wheel. Also known as a mudguard, it serves several purposes:

Protection: The front fender helps protect the rider and the motorcycle from road debris, such as rocks, dirt, water, and mud. It prevents these elements from being thrown up by the rotating front wheel and hitting the rider or other parts of the bike.

Aerodynamics: The design of the front fender can influence the airflow around the motorcycle, reducing air drag and improving stability. Some fenders are designed with aerodynamic considerations in mind, especially in sport bikes where high speeds are involved.

Style: Front fenders can significantly contribute to the overall look and style of a motorcycle. They come in various shapes, sizes, and materials, allowing riders to customize their bikes to match their preferences or the overall design theme of the motorcycle.
