The rear axle of a motorcycle is the main component that connects the rear wheel of the motorcycle to the frame. It has the important function of supporting the rear wheel, transmitting power, and keeping the tire aligned with the frame. The rear axle is usually made of metal material and has sufficient strength and rigidity to withstand the load and vibration of the motorcycle while driving.

Axle Shaft: The axle shaft is the main part of the rear wheel shaft, which connects the hub of the rear wheel of the motorcycle. The shaft is usually a cylindrical rod of uniform diameter that is strong enough to withstand torque and load.

Axle Sleeve: Axle sleeve is a tubular part that is sleeved on the shaft to reduce friction and wear. It is usually located between the inside of the wheel hub and the bearing seat of the frame, providing axial positioning and protecting the axle.
