The motorcycle wheel rim, also referred to as the wheel hoop or wheel spoke, is an essential component of a motorcycle's wheel assembly. It is the circular structure that holds the tire and provides support for the motorcycle's weight, as well as transmitting power and absorbing shocks from the road surface.

Motorcycle wheel rims are typically made of various materials, including steel, aluminum alloy, or magnesium alloy. Steel rims are commonly found on entry-level or off-road motorcycles due to their durability and cost-effectiveness. Aluminum or magnesium alloy rims, on the other hand, are often used on high-performance or sport bikes due to their lightweight nature and enhanced handling characteristics.
